In 1949, 34 per cent of miles travelled using a mechanical mode were by bicycle. Today that figure is down to just one to two per cent. Even though most of us own bikes - there are an estimated 27 million across the UK - we just don't use them.

A staggering 70 per cent of all car trips are less than five miles; the ideal distance for a quick spin on the bike. Perhaps we could hope to match the example of some towns in Holland and Denmark, where nearly half of all journeys are made by bicycle. A word of praise here, too, for the people of York and Cambridge, who wheel out their bicycles for as many as 20 per cent of all journeys.
